Chapter 1: Pre-historic and Ancient Rajasthan

The Land Before History

- Rajasthan's story begins long before kings and forts. The land between the Aravalli hills and the Thar desert was home to some of the earliest human beings in India.
- The Aravalli range is among the oldest mountain systems in the world, and its valleys gave shelter, stone for tools and water to early man.
- Pre-history is divided by the tools people used: Palaeolithic (Old Stone Age), Mesolithic (Middle Stone Age), Neolithic (New Stone Age), then the Chalcolithic (Copper-Stone Age) and the Bronze Age.
- RAS asks this part mainly as match-the-pair: site, river, district and the age it belongs to. Learn the sites as a set, not one by one.

Palaeolithic Rajasthan (Old Stone Age)

- Palaeolithic man lived by hunting and gathering. He made heavy stone tools — hand-axes, cleavers and choppers — from quartzite.
- Important Lower Palaeolithic finds come from the valleys of the Chambal, Banas, Berach and Luni rivers.
- Sites such as Didwana (Nagaur region) are known for very old stone tools; the Didwana area has yielded evidence counted among the oldest in Rajasthan.
- These people had no pottery, no farming and no fixed houses. They lived in rock shelters and open camps near water.

Mesolithic Rajasthan: Bagor and Tilwara

- In the Mesolithic age tools became small and sharp — tiny blades called microliths fitted into wood or bone handles.
- Bagor (Bhilwara district), on the bank of the Kothari river, is the most famous Mesolithic site of Rajasthan.
- Bagor was excavated under V. N. Misra. It has given evidence of animal domestication along with hunting — one of the earliest such pictures in India.
- Bagor also yielded burials, microliths in large numbers and later Chalcolithic contact material, so it connects the Stone Age with the metal age.
- Tilwara (Barmer district), on the bank of the Luni river, is the other great Mesolithic site of western Rajasthan.
- Tilwara is known for microliths and evidence of a Mesolithic settlement in the desert margin — proof that even the dry west was lived in when the climate was kinder.

MEMORY HOOK: Bagor = Bhilwara + Kothari river + microliths + domestication. Tilwara = Luni river + the desert's Mesolithic camp. B for Bagor, B for Bhilwara.

EXAM TRAP: Bagor is on the Kothari, not the Banas. Tilwara is on the Luni, not the Kothari. RAS loves swapping these two rivers.

The Chalcolithic Cultures: Ahar-Banas and Others

- Chalcolithic people used copper along with stone. They were farmers and village-dwellers — the first settled life of Rajasthan.
- The Ahar culture, also called the Banas culture, flourished in south-eastern Rajasthan along the Banas river and its tributaries, roughly between 3000 BCE and 1500 BCE.
- Ahar (Udaipur district), on the Ahar river, is the type-site. Its ancient name is read as Tamravati — "the copper town" — which tells you what it was famous for.
- Ahar people grew wheat, barley and rice, kept cattle, and made a distinctive black-and-red ware pottery, often painted in white.
- They lived in houses of stone and mud-brick, some with multiple rooms and big storage jars — a planned village life.
- Gilund (Rajsamand district), on the bank of the Banas, is another major Ahar-Banas site; it has given a large structure sometimes read as a fortification or a granary complex.
- Balathal (Udaipur district) is known for early farming evidence and a Chalcolithic settlement with a large enclosure.
- Bagor also has a Chalcolithic phase, showing how the same spot stayed important for thousands of years.

PYQ PATTERN: Ahar = Tamravati, black-and-red ware, Banas valley. If a statement says Ahar people did not know copper, it is wrong — the name Tamravati itself is the counter-proof.

Ganeshwar and the Copper Age of the North-East

- Ganeshwar (Sikar district), near the source of the Kantali river, is the star site of north-eastern Rajasthan.
- Ganeshwar has yielded hundreds of copper objects — arrowheads, spearheads, chisels, celts and fish-hooks — in numbers unmatched at any other Chalcolithic site of India.
- It is dated broadly to around 2800 BCE and is treated as a great copper-supplying centre, possibly feeding copper even to Harappan towns.
- The nearby Khetri copper belt explains why: this region had rich copper ore, and Ganeshwar sat where ore, water and routes met.

MEMORY HOOK: Ganeshwar = Sikar + Kantali river + copper in bulk. Remember "G for Ganeshwar, G for gana (many) copper tools."

Kalibangan: Rajasthan's Harappan City

- Kalibangan (Hanumangarh district) stands on the bank of the Ghaggar river, identified with the ancient Saraswati-Drishadvati plain.
- It was excavated under the direction of B. B. Lal and B. K. Thapar of the Archaeological Survey of India.
- Kalibangan belongs to the Indus (Harappan) civilisation and has two phases: an Early Harappan phase and a Mature Harappan phase.
- Its most famous find is a ploughed field from the Early Harappan phase — among the earliest ploughed fields known anywhere in the world.
- The city had a citadel and a lower town, mud-brick houses, fire altars and a well-planned layout, making it the third great Harappan city-region after Harappa and Mohenjo-daro in the western group.

- Kalibangan also shows an earthquake had damaged the early settlement, after which the Mature Harappan city rose.

Site	District/Area	River	Age/Culture	Star fact
Bagor	Bhilwara	Kothari	Mesolithic	Microliths, early animal domestication
Tilwara	Barmer	Luni	Mesolithic	Desert-margin Mesolithic settlement
Ahar	Udaipur	Ahar (Banas basin)	Chalcolithic	Tamravati, black-and-red ware
Gilund	Rajsamand	Banas	Chalcolithic (Ahar-Banas)	Large structure of the Banas culture
Balathal	Udaipur	—	Chalcolithic	Early farming settlement
Ganeshwar	Sikar	Kantali	Chalcolithic	Hundreds of copper objects
Kalibangan	Hanumangarh	Ghaggar	Harappan (Bronze Age)	Ploughed field, fire altars

EXAM TRAP: Kalibangan is in Rajasthan but it is a Harappan site, not an Ahar-culture site. Ahar is Chalcolithic and local; Kalibangan is Bronze Age and part of the Indus world. Do not mix the two.

Bairat (Viratnagar): Where Many Ages Meet

- Bairat, ancient Viratnagar (Jaipur region), is one of the most layered ancient sites of Rajasthan.
- Tradition links Viratnagar with the Matsya kingdom of the Mahabharata age — the land where the Pandavas are said to have spent their incognito year (agyaatvaas).
- Bairat has yielded two Ashokan edicts — the Bairat edict and the Bhabru edict, the Bhabru edict being special because in it Ashoka openly declares his faith in the Buddha, the Dhamma and the Sangha.
- Remains of a Buddhist stupa and monastery on Bijak hill show Bairat was an early Buddhist centre.
- Painted Grey Ware and Northern Black Polished Ware levels connect Bairat to the early historic cultures of the Ganga plain.

MEMORY HOOK: Bairat gives three gifts to the examiner — Matsya janapada, Ashoka's Bhabru edict, and Buddhist remains. Any one of them can be the question.

The Ancient Janapadas of Rajasthan

- By the 6th century BCE, Rajasthan's regions had grown into janapadas (territorial states).
- Matsya — capital Viratnagar (Bairat) — covered roughly the Jaipur-Alwar-Bharatpur region. The Matsya king Virata is a Mahabharata figure.
- Surasena, centred at Mathura, touched the Bharatpur side of Rajasthan.
- Kuru influence reached the northern fringes; Avanti (Malwa) pressed against the south-east, and the Chambal valley was long contested between Rajasthan's states and Malwa.
- Tribal republics (gana-sanghas) also existed: the Malavas and Sibis are linked with parts of Rajasthan in early centuries; Sibi's capital Madhyamika is identified with Nagari near Chittorgarh.

- Alexander's invasion pushed several Punjab tribes southward, and some settled in Rajasthan's plains, adding to this gana (republican) tradition.

Society and Culture of Ancient Rajasthan

- Early historic Rajasthan was a land of agriculture, cattle wealth and trade routes. The route from the Ganga plain to Gujarat's ports crossed Rajasthan, making towns like Bairat and Nagari prosperous.
- Religion was mixed from the start: Vedic ritual, Buddhism, Jainism and local mother-goddess and Naga cults lived side by side. Ashokan edicts, Buddhist ruins at Bairat and Kolvi caves, and early Jain centres show this plural character.
- The Kolvi and Binnayaga caves (Jhalawar region) are notable early Buddhist rock-cut caves of Rajasthan.
- Society was organised in varna and guild lines; inscriptions of the early centuries CE record merchants, artisans and donors, not only kings.
- By the Gupta age and after, temple-building, land grants to Brahmanas and the slow growth of feudal (samanta) order set the stage for the Rajput kingdoms of the early medieval period.

PYQ PATTERN: Nagari near Chittorgarh = ancient Madhyamika, capital of the Sibi janapada. Bairat = Viratnagar, capital of Matsya. Both are favourite match-the-pair items.

Chapter 2: Sources of Rajasthan History

Why Sources Matter

- Rajasthan's history is rebuilt from four kinds of sources: archaeological (things dug up and inscriptions), archival (paper records of the princely states), literary (poems, khyats and chronicles) and numismatic (coins).
- RAS asks direct questions: which inscription, which author, which record-name. This chapter is a pure scoring chapter — treat it as a fact bank.

Archaeological Sources: Inscriptions

- The Ghosundi inscription (near Chittorgarh), dated to about the 1st century BCE, is among the earliest inscriptions of Rajasthan.
- Written in Sanskrit in Brahmi script, Ghosundi records the building of a stone enclosure (puja-shila-prakara) for the worship of Sankarshana and Vasudeva — key early evidence of Bhagavata (Vaishnava) devotion.
- The Bijolia inscription (Bhilwara district), dated 1170 CE, is a rock inscription of the Chauhan period.
- Bijolia gives the genealogy of the Chahamanas (Chauhans) of Ajmer-Shakambhari and preserves ancient names of places — it tells us, for example, that Bijolia was called Vindhyavali and the region's towns bore Sanskrit names.
- The Chirwa inscription (1273 CE, near Udaipur) belongs to the Guhila period of Mewar and records the achievements of the Guhila rulers and their officials.
- The Eklingji inscription (1488 CE) and other Mewar prashastis record Guhila genealogy and temple endowments at the Eklingji temple, the family shrine of the Maharanas.

- The Raj Prashasti of Rana Raj Singh, inscribed on marble slabs at Rajsamand lake (1676 CE), is counted among the largest inscriptions of India; it was composed by Ranchhod Bhatt and narrates Mewar's history.
- The Kumbhalgarh prashasti of Rana Kumbha's time records the Guhila line and Kumbha's works.

Inscription	Date (approx.)	Place	What it tells
Ghosundi	1st century BCE	Near Chittorgarh	Early Vaishnava worship; Sanskrit in Brahmi
Bijolia	1170 CE	Bijolia (Bhilwara)	Chauhan genealogy; old place-names
Chirwa	1273 CE	Chirwa (Udaipur)	Guhila rulers of Mewar
Eklingji	1488 CE	Eklingji (Udaipur)	Guhila genealogy, temple grants
Raj Prashasti	1676 CE	Rajsamand (Nau Chowki)	Mewar history; among India's largest inscriptions

EXAM TRAP: Ghosundi is early (BCE) and Vaishnava; Bijolia is 12th century and Chauhan. If options swap their centuries, the statement is wrong.

Numismatic Sources: Coins

- Coins fix dates, trade and royal claims where poems exaggerate.
- Punch-marked coins are the earliest coins found in Rajasthan, showing links with the pan-Indian economy of the janapada age.
- Indo-Greek, Kushana and Gupta coins found at sites like Bairat and Nagari show the currents of trade and rule reaching Rajasthan.
- The Gurjara-Pratiharas issued coins; the famous Adivaraha type (with the boar incarnation) is linked with Mihir Bhoja.
- Later, each Rajput state minted its own coins in the Mughal and British periods; the princely mints (for example at Jaipur, Jodhpur and Udaipur) and their coin-names are a micro-topic RAS occasionally touches.
- Coins of the Malava gana bearing legends confirm the republican polities of early Rajasthan.

Archival Sources: The Paper Empire of the States

- The princely states of Rajasthan kept some of India's richest archives, today centred at the Rajasthan State Archives, Bikaner, founded in 1955, with regional record offices.
- Records were kept in Marwari and Hindi, often in the Mahajani script, in registers and bundles maintained by hereditary record-keepers.
- Key record types the examiner loves:

Record	Meaning
Bahi	Ledger/register book of accounts or records
Khaata	Account book of a person, village or transaction
Patta	Document granting land or rights; also the lease deed
Parwana	Royal order or written command
Kharita	Formal letter between rulers/courts

Record	Meaning
Arzdasht	Petition or report submitted to the ruler
Sanad	Grant or certificate issued by authority
Hakikat bahi	Diary-like record of court events (famous in Marwar)
Hasil / Jama	Revenue realised / revenue assessed

- Marwar's Hakikat Bahis are day-to-day court diaries and are treated as a gold mine for 18th-19th century social and political history.

MEMORY HOOK: Bahi = the book, Khaata = the account, Patta = the grant paper, Kharita = the letter between kings. Four words, four marks, asked again and again.

Literary Sources

- Prithviraj Raso, attributed to Chand Bardai, the court poet of Prithviraj Chauhan III, celebrates the hero of Tarain.
- Modern scholars debate the Raso: the received long text grew over centuries, so historians treat it as bardic literature, not a contemporary chronicle. RAS frames this as the "Prithviraj Raso debate" — the safe answer: authorship is traditionally Chand Bardai's, but the present form is a later, enlarged one.
- Muhnot Nainsi (17th century), a minister of Marwar under Maharaja Jaswant Singh I, wrote Nainsi ri Khyat — the most trusted of the khyats, covering the history of Marwar and other Rajput states — and Marwar ra Pargana ri Vigat, a village-by-village statistical account of Marwar's parganas.
- Because of his accuracy, Nainsi is called the "Abul Fazl of Rajasthan" — his Vigat does for Marwar what the Ain-i-Akbari does for the Mughal Empire.
- Bankidas (1771-1833), court poet of Jodhpur's Maharaja Man Singh, wrote Bankidas ri Khyat, famous for its frank and bitter comments on rulers and on the growing British shadow.
- Kaviraja Shyamaldas wrote Veer Vinod, the commissioned history of Mewar under Maharana Sajjan Singh — rich in documents, it was so frank that its circulation was restricted by the court.
- Suryamal Misran, court poet of Bundi, wrote Vansh Bhaskar, a great Dingal history-poem of the Hada Chauhans and Rajasthan.
- Jain pattavalis and prabandhas, Charan vatas and khyats, and devotional literature complete the literary shelf.

Work	Author	Court/Region	Note
Prithviraj Raso	Chand Bardai (attributed)	Ajmer/Delhi	Bardic epic; authenticity debated
Nainsi ri Khyat	Muhnot Nainsi	Marwar	Most trusted khyat
Marwar ra Pargana ri Vigat	Muhnot Nainsi	Marwar	Village-wise account; "Abul Fazl of Rajasthan"
Bankidas ri Khyat	Bankidas	Jodhpur	Frank, anti-British tone
Veer Vinod	Shyamaldas	Mewar	Document-rich Mewar history
Vansh Bhaskar	Suryamal Misran	Bundi	Dingal history of the Hadas

EXAM TRAP: Nainsi served Marwar (Jaswant Singh I), not Mewar. Shyamaldas wrote for Mewar. Suryamal Misran belongs to Bundi. These court-author pairs are a classic swap-trap.

Foreign Accounts

- Xuanzang (Hiuen Tsang), the 7th-century Chinese pilgrim, described regions of the Gurjara country during his Indian travels, giving an outsider's picture of early medieval western India.
- Al-Biruni and the Arab geographers noticed the trade and towns of western India in the early medieval centuries.
- Mughal court works — the Akbarnama and Ain-i-Akbari of Abul Fazl and the Tuzuk-i-Jahangiri — record Rajput campaigns, marriages and mansabs from the imperial side.
- Colonel James Tod, Political Agent to the western Rajput states, wrote Annals and Antiquities of Rajasthan (1829 and 1832) — the first great English history of the Rajputs, romantic in tone but built on khyats, inscriptions and coins.
- Tod is called the "father of Rajasthan's history" in popular usage; his work made Rajputana famous in Europe, though modern historians correct his bardic dates.

PYQ PATTERN: Tod = Annals and Antiquities of Rajasthan. Nainsi = "Abul Fazl of Rajasthan". Chand Bardai = Prithviraj Raso. These three one-line pairs have appeared again and again.

Chapter 3: Early Dynasties and Rajput States

The Gurjara-Pratiharas: Shield of the North-West

- After Harsha, the Gurjara-Pratiharas rose in western India, with roots in the Jalore-Bhinmal-Mandore region of Rajasthan before their empire centred on Kannauj.
- Nagabhata I (8th century) is remembered for checking Arab advances from Sindh — the first great "shield" role Rajasthan's rulers played for India.
- Vatsaraja and Nagabhata II expanded Pratihara power; Nagabhata II took Kannauj.
- Mihir Bhoja (c. 836-885 CE) was the greatest Pratihara. His empire ran from Punjab to Bengal's edge, and his Adivaraha coins and the Gwalior prashasti sing his fame.
- Under the Pratiharas, temple art flowered — Osian (near Jodhpur) with its Hindu and Jain temples is a surviving jewel of the age.
- As Pratihara power declined in the 10th century, their feudatories — Chahamanas, Guhilas, Paramaras and others — became independent. The Rajput age begins from this break-up.

The Chahamanas (Chauhans) of Ajmer

- The Chahamanas began around Shakambhari (Sambhar), the salt-lake goddess's town, and later made Ajmer their capital — Ajmer was founded by Ajayaraja II (early 12th century), who named it Ajaymeru.
- Arnoraja built the Ana Sagar lake at Ajmer.
- Vigraharaja IV, also called Visaladeva (c. 1150-1164 CE), was the dynasty's scholar-king: he defeated neighbouring powers, patronised Sanskrit learning and is linked with the play Harikeli Nataka.
- The Delhi Shivalik pillar inscription of Vigraharaja IV boasts that he made the land between the Himalayas and the Vindhyas worthy of the name Aryavarta.

- The building at Ajmer later known through its mosque phase began in his time as a Sanskrit college (Saraswati Mandir tradition) — RAS links Vigraharaja IV with it in several keys.
- Prithviraj III (c. 1178-1192 CE), the famous Prithviraj Chauhan, succeeded as a minor under his mother Karpuradevi's regency.
- Prithviraj defeated the Chandellas of Jejakabhukti (Mahoba) and fought Muhammad Ghori twice at Tarain (in present Haryana): in the First Battle of Tarain (1191) Prithviraj won and Ghori was wounded and driven back; in the Second Battle of Tarain (1192) Ghori won, Prithviraj was captured and killed, and north India's political map changed forever.

MEMORY HOOK: Tarain 1191 = Prithviraj wins. Tarain 1192 = Ghori wins. Same field, opposite results, one year apart — the single most-asked date pair of this chapter.

EXAM TRAP: Prithviraj III's mother and regent was Karpuradevi. His court poet is traditionally Chand Bardai. The capital in his time was Ajmer (with Delhi held as a Tomara-inherited city).

The Guhilas of Mewar

- The Guhilas of Mewar (capital line: Nagda, then Ahar, then Chittor) are Rajasthan's longest-lived royal house.
- Tradition credits Bappa Rawal (8th century) as the effective founder of Guhila power; he is said to have taken Chittor from the Mori ruler and received the title Rawal. Mewar tradition treats the Maharana as the Diwan (custodian) of Eklingji, the state deity.
- Kalbhoja is generally identified with Bappa Rawal in scholarly readings.
- Later Guhila branches split: one line at Chittor (Rawal branch) and others; the Guhilot clan name and the later Sisodia name (from village Sisoda) both come from this house.
- Mewar's mountain ring, its Eklingji faith and its refusal-tradition shaped the "Mewar model" of kingship that later chapters celebrate.

The Rathores of Marwar

- The Rathores trace their line to the Rashtrakuta-named stock and, in Rajasthan's tradition, to Rao Siha, who established Rathore power in the Pali-Marwar region in the 13th century after the fall of Kannauj's Gahadavala order.
- Rao Chunda of Mandore made Marwar a real state; he received Mandore and built Rathore strength.
- Rao Jodha (15th century) founded Jodhpur in 1459 and built the great Mehrangarh fort on its hill — the Rathore capital ever since.
- Marwar's desert made it hard to conquer and its cavalry hard to beat; its rulers alternated between defiance of Delhi and high Mughal service.

The Kachhwahas of Amber

- The Kachhwahas established themselves at Dausa and then Amber (near modern Jaipur), claiming descent from Kush, son of Rama.
- Early Kachhwaha rulers like Dulha Rai (12th century) built the Amber line amid Meena chiefs, whose lands they gradually absorbed — the Meenas remained a proud community of the Jaipur region.
- Amber's great age came with Bharmal (Bihar Mal), Man Singh I and the Jai Singhs in the Mughal centuries (Chapter 5).

- Sawai Jai Singh II later founded Jaipur in 1727, shifting the capital from Amber to the planned pink city.

The Bhattis of Jaisalmer

- The Bhattis, a Yadava-linked clan, ruled the deep desert of Jaisalmer.
- Rawal Jaisal founded Jaisalmer fort and town in 1155 CE on the Trikuta hill — the golden fort of Sonargarh.
- The Bhattis grew rich on the caravan routes between India, Sindh and Central Asia, taxing and guarding the desert trade.
- Jaisalmer's remoteness kept it freer from invasion than the eastern states; its famous saka episodes came when Alauddin Khalji's and later forces reached it.

The Hadas of Bundi and Kota

- The Hada Chauhans carved Bundi out of the Hadoti plateau in the 13th-14th centuries; Rao Deva is credited with founding Hada power in Bundi (traditionally 1241 CE, taking the region from Meena chiefs).
- Kota began as a jagir carved from Bundi: in 1625 CE, Shah Jahan's grant (executed in the following years) made Madho Singh, son of Bundi's Rao Ratan Singh, the first independent Rao of Kota — Bundi and Kota thus became sister states of one clan.
- Hadoti's black soil and Chambal river made Bundi-Kota rich farming states, and their rulers served the Mughals as valued commanders.

Dynasty	Region/Capital	Key founder/figure	Signature fact
Gurjara-Pratihara	Kannauj (roots in Marwar)	Nagabhata I, Mihir Bhoja	Checked Arab advance; Adivaraha coins
Chahamana (Chauhan)	Ajmer	Vigraharaja IV, Prithviraj III	Tarain 1191 won, 1192 lost
Guhila/Sisodia	Mewar (Chittor)	Bappa Rawal	Maharana = Diwan of Eklingji
Rathore	Marwar (Jodhpur 1459)	Rao Jodha	Mehrangarh fort
Kachhwaha	Amber, then Jaipur 1727	Dulha Rai; Sawai Jai Singh II	Planned city of Jaipur
Bhatti	Jaisalmer 1155	Rawal Jaisal	Sonargarh golden fort
Hada Chauhan	Bundi; Kota (1625)	Rao Deva; Madho Singh	Kota split from Bundi

PYQ PATTERN: Jodhpur 1459 (Rao Jodha), Jaisalmer 1155 (Rawal Jaisal), Jaipur 1727 (Sawai Jai Singh II), Kota independent 1625 (Madho Singh). City-foundation match-the-pair is a permanent RAS favourite.

Chapter 4: Mewar and Marwar — Resistance and Glory

Rana Kumbha of Mewar (1433-1468)

- Rana Kumbha is Mewar's great builder-king and one of medieval India's most learned rulers.

- He defeated the combined pressure of Malwa and Gujarat; his victory over Mahmud Khilji of Malwa is celebrated by the Vijay Stambha (Tower of Victory) at Chittorgarh, built in 1448 — nine storeys of carved stone, dedicated to Vishnu.
- Kumbha built or repaired a chain of forts — tradition credits him with building 32 of Mewar's 84 forts — above all Kumbhalgarh, whose long wall runs some 36 km across the Aravallis, among the longest fort walls in the world.
- Kumbhalgarh's architect is named as Mandan, who also wrote treatises on architecture (Vastushastra works) at Kumbha's court.
- Kumbha himself wrote the Rasikpriya commentary on the Gita Govinda and works on music such as the Sangitaraja tradition — a warrior who was also a scholar.
- He was assassinated in 1468 by his own son Uda — a dark end RAS sometimes tests through the simple pair "Kumbha — killed by son Uda."

EXAM TRAP: Vijay Stambha (1448) is Kumbha's, for the Malwa victory. The other Chittor tower, Kirti Stambha, is older (12th century, Jain, built by the merchant Jija of the Bagherwal community, dedicated to Adinath). Victory = Kumbha; Kirti = Jain merchant. Never swap them.

Rana Sanga and Khanwa (1527)

- Rana Sanga (Sangram Singh, r. 1508-1528) united Rajput power as no one had since Prithviraj: Mewar's banner drew chiefs from across Rajasthan, and tradition says his body bore 80 wounds; he had lost an eye and a hand in earlier wars.
- He defeated Ibrahim Lodi's forces at Khatoli (1517) and Dholpur (1519), checking Delhi's reach into Rajasthan.
- When Babur took Delhi (1526), Sanga expected the invader to raid and leave, as Timur had. When Babur stayed, the Rajput confederacy marched.
- At Khanwa (16 March 1527), near Bharatpur, Babur's field artillery, matchlocks and wagon-fort broke the Rajput charge. Sanga was wounded and carried from the field; he died the next year (1528), by tradition poisoned by his own nobles who feared another campaign.

MEMORY HOOK: Khanwa 1527 = Babur beats Sanga with guns and carts. Khatoli 1517 = Sanga beats Lodi. Sanga won against Delhi's sultan and lost to the new gunpowder empire — that contrast is the whole lesson.

The Three Sieges (Sakas) of Chittor

- 1303 — Alauddin Khalji: the Sultan took Chittor after a long siege; Rana Ratan Singh was the ruler; the jauhar of Rani Padmini belongs to the bardic tradition (Jayasi's Padmavat, 1540). The fort was renamed Khizrabad for a time.
- 1535 — Bahadur Shah of Gujarat: Chittor fell again; Rani Karnavati, regent for the young Vikramaditya, led the jauhar in which tradition counts 13,000 women; the famous rakhi-to-Humayun story also belongs to this siege's tradition.
- 1568 — Akbar: the third and most brutal siege. Maharana Udai Singh withdrew to the hills, leaving the defence to Jaimal Rathore and Patta Sisodia, who died fighting; a mass jauhar followed (February 1568). Akbar's victory here broke Mewar's shield but not Mewar.

PYQ PATTERN: Chittor's three sakas — 1303 (Alauddin), 1535 (Bahadur Shah), 1568 (Akbar). Defenders linked: Ratan Singh; Karnavati's regency; Jaimal-Patta. Learn as one triple-row, because RAS asks "third saka — which Mughal?" directly.

Maharana Pratap and Haldighati (1576)

- Maharana Pratap (r. 1572-1597), son of Udai Singh II (founder of Udaipur, 1559), refused personal submission to Akbar even as other Rajput houses entered Mughal service.
- Akbar sent missions — including Man Singh of Amber in 1573 — to bring Pratap in; they failed.
- On 18 June 1576, at Haldighati (near Gogunda, Rajsamand district), Pratap's force met the Mughal army led by Man Singh I with Asaf Khan. The narrow pass, its turmeric-yellow soil giving the field its name, saw fierce fighting.
- Pratap, mounted on his legendary horse Chetak, attacked Man Singh's position; Chetak, wounded, carried him away and died after leaping a stream — the most beloved animal story of Rajasthan.
- The battle was tactically a Mughal success (they held the field and took Gogunda), but strategically incomplete: Pratap escaped, continued guerrilla war from the Aravalli hills, and Akbar never captured him.
- Pratap's allies included the Bhil chief Rana Punja, the loyal Jhala Man (Bida Jhala) who wore the royal insignia and died in Pratap's place at Haldighati, the Afghan Hakim Khan Sur who fought for Pratap, and the financier Bhamashah, who gave his wealth to rebuild Mewar's army.
- In 1582, at Dewair (Diver), Pratap defeated the Mughal garrison forces in a sweeping recovery — sometimes called the "Marathon of Mewar" — and in the following years recovered most of Mewar except Chittor itself.
- Pratap died in 1597 at Chawand, his wartime capital, never having submitted. His son Amar Singh I finally made peace with Jahangir in 1615 — on honourable terms: the Rana need not attend court personally; his son Karan would serve instead.

EXAM TRAP: Haldighati's Mughal commander was Man Singh I of Amber, not Akbar himself — Akbar was not present. Dewair (1582) was Pratap's victory, not a defeat. Chawand, not Udaipur, is where Pratap died.

Rao Chandrasen of Marwar: The Forgotten Pratap

- Rao Chandrasen (r. 1562-1581), son of Rao Maldeo of Marwar, refused Akbar's suzerainty and fought a lifelong guerrilla resistance from the hills of Siwana and Saran.
- When Akbar annexed Jodhpur and set up his own administration, Chandrasen kept the Rathore honour alive in exile, dying in 1581 still unsubmitted.
- Because his struggle parallels Pratap's but is less sung, historians call him "Marwar ka Pratap" and "the forgotten hero". RAS asks exactly this epithet.

Durgadas Rathore: Saviour of the Rathore Line

- When Maharaja Jaswant Singh I died at Jamrud (1678) without a surviving son, Aurangzeb tried to absorb Marwar and impose terms on the infant heir Ajit Singh.
- Durgadas Rathore, the loyal Rathore noble, smuggled the infant Ajit Singh out of Delhi (1679) — with the help of devoted followers — and waged a thirty-year guerrilla war to restore him.
- This Rathore-Sisodia resistance also sheltered Prince Akbar's rebellion (1681) and kept Aurangzeb tied down in Rajasthan during the Deccan years.
- In 1707-08, after Aurangzeb's death, Ajit Singh recovered Jodhpur with Durgadas's help — one of the great loyalty stories of India.
- Durgadas died in 1718 at Ujjain; his chhatri stands on the Shipra's bank.

MEMORY HOOK: Three resistance icons, three labels: Pratap = Mewar's unconquered Rana; Chandrasen = "Marwar ka Pratap"; Durgadas = the loyal sword who saved Ajit Singh. RAS mixes the labels on purpose — pin each to its state.

Event	Year	Hero/Figure	Opponent
Vijay Stambha built	1448	Rana Kumbha	(victory over Mahmud Khilji, Malwa)
Battle of Khatoli	1517	Rana Sanga	Ibrahim Lodi
Battle of Khanwa	1527	Rana Sanga	Babur
Third siege of Chittor	1568	Jaimal & Patta defended	Akbar
Battle of Haldighati	1576	Maharana Pratap	Man Singh I (for Akbar)
Battle of Dewair	1582	Maharana Pratap	Mughal garrisons
Mewar-Mughal treaty	1615	Amar Singh I	Jahangir

Chapter 5: Cooperation with Central Power

The Other Half of the Story

- Resistance is only half of Rajasthan's medieval story. The other half is cooperation: Rajput houses that allied with Delhi and the Mughals rose to imperial rank, wealth and empire-wide commands.
- RAS tests the balance: who resisted (Pratap, Chandrasen), who allied (Amber's Kachhwahas first of all), and which treaties mark the turns.

Amber Opens the Door: Bharmal and Man Singh I

- In 1562, Raja Bharmal (Bihar Mal) of Amber became the first Rajput ruler to accept Akbar's suzerainty and a matrimonial alliance — his daughter (known in Mughal sources as Mariam-uz-Zamani) married Akbar and became the mother of Jahangir.
- Bharmal's calculation saved Amber from invasion and lifted it to the first rank among Rajput states.
- His grandson Man Singh I (r. 1589-1614) became one of Akbar's greatest generals and a Navratna of the court, holding the highest mansab open in his time (7000 zat in later years).
- Man Singh commanded at Haldighati (1576) against Pratap, conquered Kabul, Bengal, Bihar and Odisha campaigns, and served as governor of Kabul, Bengal and Bihar-Deccan charges at different times.
- He built the fort of Amber's palace complex, the Govind Devji temple at Vrindavan and works at Rajmahal and Rohtas; the Jagat Shiromani temple at Amber is linked with his family.

EXAM TRAP: The first Mughal-Rajput marriage alliance was Amber's (1562), not Mewar's. Mewar never gave a daughter in marriage to the Mughals — that refusal is a point of Sisodia pride RAS statements often test.

Mirza Raja Jai Singh and the Treaty of Purandar (1665)

- Mirza Raja Jai Singh I of Amber (r. 1622-1667), titled "Mirza Raja" by Shah Jahan, was the empire's most trusted Rajput commander under Shah Jahan and Aurangzeb.

- Sent against Shivaji, he combined siege pressure with diplomacy and concluded the Treaty of Purandar (June 1665): Shivaji gave up 23 forts, kept 12, accepted Mughal service, and his son Sambhaji received a mansab; Shivaji later visited Agra (1666) and famously escaped.
- Jai Singh also campaigned in the Deccan against Bijapur; he died at Burhanpur in 1667 on the return from that campaign.

MEMORY HOOK: Purandar 1665 = Jai Singh's diplomacy + Shivaji's 23 forts. The treaty-maker is a Jaipur king, not a Maratha or a Mughal noble.

Maharaja Jaswant Singh of Marwar

- Maharaja Jaswant Singh I of Marwar (r. 1638-1678) rose high in Shah Jahan's service, receiving the title of Maharaja.
- In the Mughal war of succession he fought for Dara Shikoh and was defeated by Aurangzeb at Dharmat (1658) near Ujjain.
- Later reconciled with Aurangzeb, he held commands on the north-west frontier and died at Jamrud (1678) — the death that triggered Durgadas's rescue of the infant Ajit Singh (Chapter 4).

Who Allied, Who Resisted, and When

State	Policy towards Delhi/Mughals	Turning point
Amber (Jaipur)	Earliest and closest ally	Bharmal's alliance, 1562
Bikaner	Early ally (Rai Singh in Akbar's service)	From 1570s
Marwar (Jodhpur)	Mixed: Chandrasen resisted; Jaswant Singh served; Ajit Singh's line resisted Aurangzeb	Dharmat 1658; revolt 1679-1707
Mewar (Udaipur)	Longest resistance; honourable peace 1615; no marriage alliance	Haldighati 1576; treaty 1615
Bundi/Kota (Hada)	Steady Mughal service as commanders	17th century mansabs
Jaisalmer	Remote; limited contact, later accommodation	Mughal period

- Bikaner's Raja Rai Singh built Junagarh fort (1589-94) and served Akbar and Jahangir on imperial campaigns; Bikaner also gave a marriage alliance to the Mughals.
- The pattern to remember: the desert and eastern houses allied early and grew rich on mansabs; Mewar held out on honour; Marwar swung between the two.

PYQ PATTERN: "Which Rajput state did NOT give a daughter in marriage to the Mughals?" — Mewar. "First to accept Akbar's suzerainty?" — Amber under Bharmal (1562).

Chapter 6: Administrative and Revenue System in Medieval Rajasthan

The King and His Court

- The Rajput king was the centre of the state: commander, judge and fountain of honour, ruling with the advice of a council of senior nobles and ministers.
- The chief minister was usually called Pradhan (in Marwar and Mewar the Pradhan was a great noble); the Diwan handled revenue and finance, the Bakshi military pay and muster, and the Khan-i-Saman / Bhandari the household and stores in different states' usage.
- Royal orders went out as parwanas and sanads; court life is recorded in the Hakikat bahis of Marwar.
- Succession followed primogeniture in most states, but a strong tradition of noble consent survived — the great sardars (nobles) could resist a weak or unpopular heir.

Sardars, Jagir and Khalisa

- Land and revenue were divided into two great heads:
- Khalisa — crown land, administered directly by the king's officers; its revenue filled the royal treasury.
- Jagir — land assigned to nobles (jagirdars) in return for service, mainly military. The jagirdar collected the assigned revenue and maintained troops for the king.
- Below great jagirs came smaller tenures: bhom (land of Bhomia holders who guarded villages and passes), muafi lands (revenue-free grants, often religious or charitable), sasan grants to Brahmanas and Charans, and inam rewards.
- The famous Marwar saying ranks service-tenures by duty: the bhumia's land was held for watch-and-ward of the village — a Bhomia who died protecting the village was honoured as a folk-deity in many parts of Rajasthan.

MEMORY HOOK: Khalisa = king's own pocket land. Jagir = salary paid in land. Muafi = tax-free. Sasan = granted to Brahmana/Charan. Four tenures, four definitions — pure statement-question material.

Land Revenue: Assessment and Collection

- The state's main income was land revenue. Assessment rested on the measurement of land and the estimated produce of the village.
- Common methods across Rajput states:
- Batai (also called bhaoli or ghalla-bakhshi) — the crop itself was divided between cultivator and state at the threshing floor.
- Kankut — the standing crop was appraised by inspection and a cash/kind demand fixed.
- Zabti / measurement-based cash rates — applied in parts nearer Mughal influence, with per-bigha cash rates by crop.
- Ijarah — revenue farming: the right to collect a village or district was auctioned to the highest bidder for a term; convenient for the state but often harsh on peasants.
- The standard units: the bigha for area; produce measured in maunds and seers; the state's share commonly ranged between one-third and one-half of produce in kind systems, varying by state and soil.
- Besides land revenue, states earned from customs and transit duties on Rajasthan's caravan routes, salt (Sambhar lake was a treasure — its salt revenues were shared historically between Jaipur and Jodhpur claims), mines, fairs and fines.

EXAM TRAP: Sambhar salt was jointly claimed — Jaipur and Marwar both drew on it, and under the British it became a leased imperial salt source. "Sambhar belonged only to Jaipur" is a false statement in RAS keys.

Village Administration

- The village was run by its own headmen under the distant eye of the jagirdar or state officer:
- Patel — the village headman: led the village, settled disputes, and was answerable for revenue.
- Patwari — the village record-keeper: maintained field maps, khasra (field book) and accounts of holdings and dues.
- Chaudhary — a senior village or caste/territory notable who helped in revenue and order, especially in Jat areas of the north and east.
- Shahna and watchmen guarded crops and village order; the Bhomia guarded passes and boundaries.
- Above the village stood the pargana, administered by officers like the hakim / faujdar / amil in different states, and districts were grouped under the diwan's revenue officials.

Officer	Level	Job
Pradhan	State	Chief minister
Diwan	State	Revenue and finance chief
Bakshi	State	Military pay and muster
Hakim/Faujdar	Pargana	Order and revenue supervision
Patel	Village	Headman; revenue responsibility
Patwari	Village	Land records and accounts
Chaudhary	Village/region	Notable assisting revenue and order

Military Organisation

- The army was a feudal levy: the king's own household troops plus the contingents of jagirdars and sardars, who brought horsemen proportioned to their jagirs.
- Cavalry was the arm of honour; hill forts were the state's bones — a kingdom could lose a field battle and survive in its forts, as Mewar and Marwar proved repeatedly.
- Forts were commanded by a kiledar, with granaries and water systems (tankas, baoris) designed for long sieges.
- Elephants, camels (essential in the desert states) and later artillery completed the force; Marwar and Bikaner camel corps have a famous later history in imperial service.

PYQ PATTERN: Medieval Rajasthan revenue — remember batai (crop-sharing) as the most widespread traditional method, and ijarah (farming) as the harshest. Patel (headman) vs Patwari (records) is a standing match-the-pair.

Chapter 7: 18th-19th Century Rajasthan

After the Mughals: The Maratha Pressure

- As Mughal power decayed in the 18th century, Rajput states fell back into succession wars and noble feuds — and the Marathas entered Rajasthan demanding chauth and sardeshmukhi, raiding and intervening in every disputed succession.

- At the Battle of Hurda (1734), Rajput rulers met under Sawai Jai Singh's lead to organise common resistance to Maratha pressure — the Hurda Conference is remembered as a rare moment of Rajput unity, though it did not hold.
- Maratha houses — Holkar, Scindia, Gaekwad and the Bhonsle interest — treated Rajasthan as a tribute field; Jaipur, Jodhpur, Mewar and Kota all suffered repeated incursions through the century.
- The Battle of Tunga (1787) saw Jaipur's forces check Mahadji Scindia's army for a time, but the long trend ran the other way; by 1800 the states were exhausted and divided.

MEMORY HOOK: Hurda 1734 = unity attempted. Tunga 1787 = Jaipur's brief check. Maratha pressure is the bridge between Mughal decline and the British treaties.

The Treaties with the British, 1817-18

- In 1817-18, during the final Maratha and Pindari wars, the East India Company under Lord Hastings (Governor-General) offered protection; Charles Metcalfe, the Delhi Resident, negotiated the Rajputana treaties.
- One by one the states accepted British paramountcy by treaty:

State	Treaty year	Note
Karauli	1817	Among the very first to sign
Kota	1817	December 1817; Zalim Singh's diplomacy
Jodhpur (Marwar)	1818	January 1818
Udaipur (Mewar)	1818	January 1818
Jaipur	1818	April 1818
Bikaner	1818	1818
Jaisalmer	1818	December 1818
Bundi, Kishangarh, Banswara, Dungarpur, Pratapgarh, Tonk	1818	The remaining states followed in 1818

- Sirohi signed later, in 1823 — the last of the Rajputana states to enter treaty relations.
- Under the settlements the states kept internal rule but gave up external relations and paid tribute; Political Agents of the Company (later the Crown) resided at the courts, grouped under the Agent to the Governor-General for Rajputana (AGG), with headquarters at Mount Abu / Ajmer arrangements in later years.
- British-run Ajmer-Merwara became a directly administered island in the middle of Rajputana.

EXAM TRAP: The treaties are 1817-18, not 1803 or 1857. Sirohi (1823) is the odd one out RAS uses to catch "all states signed in 1818" statements.

Social Condition in the 18th-19th Century

- Society was feudal and caste-bound: Rajput sardars at the top, Charans and Bhats as sacred bards, merchant Mahajans running finance and trade, and a peasantry carrying heavy and multiplying cesses (lag-bag — dozens of small extra levies beyond land revenue).
- Practices reformers later attacked were widespread: sati, female infanticide among some Rajput clans, child marriage, and the traffic in women and slaves in distress years. The British and reforming officials like Wilkinson pressed bans on infanticide and sati in the states from the 1830s-40s.

- Against this stood strong traditions of charity, water-building (baoris, tanks), temple patronage and folk religion — the same society produced both the cesses and the saints' movements that comforted the poor.
- Education was traditional — pathshalas, Jain and court learning — until the first modern schools and a college at Ajmer (Mayo College, 1875, for princes) appeared late in the century.

The Revolt of 1857 in Rajasthan

- In 1857 the British had six cantonments in Rajasthan: Nasirabad, Neemuch, Erinpura, Deoli, Beawar and Kherwara. The revolt in Rajasthan began at the cantonments, lit by news from Meerut and Delhi.

Place	Date (1857)	What happened
Nasirabad	28 May 1857	Sepoys of the 15th Bengal Native Infantry rose — the FIRST outbreak in Rajasthan
Neemuch	3 June 1857	Sepoys rose under leaders incl. Mohammad Ali Beg and Heera Singh; rebels marched towards Delhi
Erinpura	21 August 1857	Jodhpur Legion sepoys rose and marched to join the Auwa resistance
Kota	15 October 1857	City and troops rose under Lala Jaydayal and Risaldar Mehrab Khan
Auwa (Marwar)	Sept 1857 onwards	Thakur Kushal Singh Champawat defied the British and Jodhpur's pro-British court

- Nasirabad, 28 May 1857, is the first spark in Rajasthan: the sepoys killed officers and marched for Delhi.
- At Kota, the revolt was the deepest: the Maharao Ram Singh II was kept in his palace, effectively a prisoner, while the rebels under Jaydayal (a court pleader) and Mehrab Khan ran the city for about six months. Kota was retaken by British forces under Major General Roberts in March 1858, and the rebel leaders were executed.
- At Auwa, Thakur Kushal Singh Champawat defeated a combined British-Jodhpur force at Bithora (8 September 1857) — the Political Agent Captain Monck Mason was killed in the fighting at Auwa — before the fort finally fell in January 1858. Kushal Singh escaped and remained a fugitive hero.
- The Jodhpur Legion's rising at Erinpura fed men into Auwa. Tantia Tope later swept through Rajasthan (1858) seeking Rajput support, entering via Banswara-Jhalawar side, but the princes stayed loyal to the British.
- Rajasthan's princes, guided by their Political Agents, by and large supported the British in 1857 — which is why the revolt here stayed a cantonment-and-city rising rather than a general war. The AGG George Patrick Lawrence directed the British response from within Rajputana.

EXAM TRAP: Neemuch was NOT first — Nasirabad (28 May 1857) was first; Neemuch followed on 3 June. And Kota's Maharao Ram Singh supported neither side openly — he was held by the rebels; the rebel leaders are Jaydayal and Mehrab Khan.

PYQ PATTERN: Kota 1857 leader pair (Jaydayal + Mehrab Khan), Auwa's Thakur (Kushal Singh Champawat), first outbreak (Nasirabad) — this triple is among the most repeated questions in the whole paper.

Chapter 8: Peasant and Tribal Movements of the 20th Century

Why the Peasants Rose

- By 1900 the peasant of Rajasthan paid land revenue plus a jungle of extra cesses — lag-bag (by some counts over a hundred petty levies), begar (forced labour) and jagirdari exactions. The 20th-century movements attacked exactly this: first the cesses, then the jagirdari system itself, and finally demanded responsible government.
- The movements below are asked as leader-movement-place triples. Learn them as triples and the marks are safe.

Bijolia: The Longest Peasant Struggle

- Bijolia (Bhilwara district) was a big jagir in Mewar where peasants faced some 84 kinds of lag-bag cesses.
- Phase one (1897 onwards): the peasants of Bijolia began collective protest — delegations to Udaipur, refusal of cesses — led in early years by local figures like Nanji Patel and Thakari Patel; an early concession (1903-04) calmed, then worsened again.
- Phase two (from 1916): Vijay Singh Pathik took leadership and turned Bijolia into an organised satyagraha — a kisan panchayat, refusal of unjust taxes, and national publicity. Pathik made Bijolia famous all over India; Gandhi's papers noticed it.
- Phase three (1920s-1941): after Pathik's arrest and exit, leaders like Manikya Lal Verma, Ramnarayan Chaudhary and Jamnalal Bajaj (who mediated) carried it on; the 1922 agreement cut many cesses, was later violated, and the struggle continued in waves until the final settlement of 1941, when most demands were conceded.
- Bijolia is called the first and longest peasant movement of Rajasthan (and a model for India) — running, in phases, for over four decades.

MEMORY HOOK: Bijolia = Mewar jagir + 84 cesses + Pathik (from 1916) + final settlement 1941. If a question gives "Bijolia" and asks the leader, the default answer is Vijay Singh Pathik.

Begun: Bijolia's Neighbour in Arms

- Begun (Chittorgarh district), another Mewar jagir, rose in 1921 on Bijolia's example against its own cesses and begar.
- The peasants organised under Ramnarayan Chaudhary's guidance from the Rajasthan Seva Sangh circle, with local leadership; firing on peasants at Begun in the repression (1923 phase) made it a byword for jagirdari cruelty, and enquiries followed.
- Begun shows the pattern: Bijolia lit the fire; the jagirs of Mewar caught it one by one.

The Eki Movement and Motilal Tejawat

- Motilal Tejawat, a former employee turned activist from a Mewar village, launched the Eki (Unity) movement in 1921 among the Bhils and Garasias of Mewar's Bhoomat region.
- At Matrikundiya (1921) thousands of tribals took the oath of unity (eki) — to refuse unjust taxes and begar and to stand together.
- Tejawat's charter of demands, the "Mewar Pukar", listed 21 demands against cesses, begar and forest restrictions.
- The movement spread to Sirohi, Dungarpur, Banswara and Idar; the firing at Neemda and police action in Sirohi (1922) were its violent chapters; Tejawat was eventually arrested in 1929 and the movement ebbed, but tribal political consciousness never went back to sleep.

EXAM TRAP: Eki = 1921 + Bhil-Garasia + Motilal Tejawat + "Mewar Pukar" (21 demands). The Mangarh massacre (1913) belongs to Govind Guru, a decade earlier — do not hand it to Tejawat.

Bhomat and the Bhil Belt

- Bhomat is the hilly Bhil homeland of south Mewar (Udaipur region). Bhil grievances — forest dues, begar, moneylender and jagirdari pressure — made Bhomat the natural base of the Eki movement and of later Bhil mobilisation.
- In the administrative vocabulary of Mewar, Bhomat was kept under special arrangements; its chiefs (Bhil garasias and bhumias) held hereditary local rights that the state could not simply ignore.

Mangarh: The Tribal Jallianwala (1913)

- Govind Guru, a social-religious reformer among the Bhils, founded the Samp Sabha (1883) and preached against liquor, theft and exploitation; his followers (the Bhagat movement) gathered every year at Mangarh hill (Banswara district, on the Rajasthan-Gujarat border).
- On 17 November 1913, British and princely-state forces surrounded the Mangarh gathering and opened fire; about 1,500 Bhils were killed by the accepted traditional count — a massacre remembered as the "Jallianwala of the tribals / of Rajasthan", six years before Amritsar.
- Govind Guru was sentenced to life imprisonment and later released; he died in 1931.
- Mangarh is now a national memorial (Mangarh Dham).

PYQ PATTERN: Mangarh 1913 — Govind Guru, Samp Sabha, Bhil gathering, 17 November. The "Jallianwala of Rajasthan" label attaches to Mangarh, and Neemuchana is sometimes called Rajasthan's second Jallianwala — keep the two massacres separate (next section).

Neemuchana (1925)

- Neemuchana (Alwar state, now in Kotputli-Behror region) protested a steep revenue enhancement imposed by the Alwar state in 1924-25; Rajput peasants of the village refused the new rates.
- On 14 May 1925, state forces fired on the assembled peasants; the official count was lower, but the accepted movement count puts the dead in the hundreds — Neemuchana is called the "Jallianwala Bagh of Rajasthan" in many Rajasthan texts, and Gandhi condemned it in Young India.
- The enquiry and all-India outrage forced Alwar to roll back much of the enhancement.

Dabra and the End of Jagirdari Cruelty

- Dabra (Nagaur district) was a Marwar jagir village where peasants, organised by the Marwar Kisan Sabha / Lok Parishad workers, resisted the jagirdar's dues.
- On 13 March 1947, the jagirdar's men attacked a peasant meeting at Dabra; several peasants were killed, among them Pannaram and others remembered as martyrs — the Dabra massacre, months before independence, became the symbol that jagirdari could not survive.
- After independence the movements' goal was achieved in law: Rajasthan abolished jagirs through the Rajasthan Land Reforms and Resumption of Jagirs Act, 1952.

Shekhawati and the Jat Movements

- In Shekhawati (Sikar-Jhunjhunu) and the Jat belt, the struggle ran through kisan sabhas: peasants fought jagirdari cesses of the Sikar and Khetri thikanas.
- The Sikar movement (1920s-30s) against the Rao Raja of Sikar's exactions, with Jat leadership and support from the Rajasthan Seva Sangh and later the Praja Mandal, won enquiry and concessions.
- In Bikaner's Jat areas, Kumbharam Arya mobilised peasants against jagirdari and begar, linking the kisan cause with the Praja Mandal.
- Bikaner state also saw the famous Dudhwa Khara movement (1940s) of peasants against the jagirdar's dues.
- The Jat mahasabha tradition and the kisan sabha tradition together made the northern peasantry the best organised in Rajasthan by the 1940s.

Movement	Place/State	Leader(s)	Year(s)	Core demand/event
Bijolia	Bijolia, Mewar	Vijay Singh Pathik	1897-1941 (Pathik from 1916)	Against 84 lag-bag cesses
Begun	Begun, Mewar	Ramnarayan Chaudhary circle	1921 onwards	Cesses and begar
Eki	Bhomat, Mewar	Motilal Tejawat	1921	Bhil-Garasia unity; Mewar Pukar, 21 demands
Mangarh	Banswara border	Govind Guru	1913	Samp Sabha gathering fired upon, ~1,500 killed
Neemuchana	Alwar	Village peasants	1925	Against revenue enhancement; firing 14 May 1925
Dabra	Nagaur, Marwar	Kisan Sabha/Lok Parishad workers	1947	Jagirdar attack on meeting
Dudhwa Khara	Bikaner	Peasant leaders	1940s	Jagirdari dues

MEMORY HOOK: Three violent dates to fix forever: Mangarh 17 Nov 1913 (Govind Guru, Bhils), Neemuchana 14 May 1925 (Alwar), Dabra 13 Mar 1947 (Marwar jagirdar). Year-place pairs are asked directly.

Chapter 9: Praja Mandal Movements and Mass Awakening

From Petitions to Responsible Government

- The Praja Mandals were the people's political organisations inside the princely states. Their demand grew in steps: civil rights first, then responsible government under the ruler's aegis, and finally merger into democratic India.
- The freedom struggle in Rajasthan followed a different route than in British India: the enemy was the local durbar-plus-British-Agent system, and the methods were satyagraha, boycott of foreign cloth, khadi, and the press.

The Awakeners: Organisations and Newspapers

- The Rajasthan Seva Sangh, founded by Vijay Singh Pathik at Wardha in 1919 (shifted to Ajmer), trained Rajasthan's first generation of political workers — Manikya Lal Verma, Ramnarayan Chaudhary and others passed through it.
- The Arya Samaj spread education, widow remarriage and anti-untouchability work across the states from the late 19th century; its schools and updeshaks quietly built the social base of the movement. Swami Dayananda himself toured Rajasthan and was honoured at Udaipur and Jodhpur courts.
- Ajmer-Merwara, being British-administered, became the movement's safe base and press centre: papers like Naveen Rajasthan (Pathik), Tarun Rajasthan and Rajasthan Kesari carried the message into the states where presses were banned.
- Marwar Hitkarini Sabha (1924) in Jodhpur, associated with Jai Narayan Vyas, prepared the ground for organised politics in Marwar.
- Gandhi's movements (Non-Cooperation 1920-22, Salt Satyagraha 1930, Quit India 1942) echoed inside the states through khadi, hartals and individual satyagrahas; in 1942 several states saw serious unrest despite bans.

The State-wise Praja Mandal Map

Bundi	Bundi Praja Mandal	1931	Kantilal circle	Among the earliest
Shahpura	Shahpura Praja Mandal	1938	Ramesh Chandra Ojha circle	First full responsible government (1947)
Dungarpur	Dungarpur Praja Mandal	1944	Bhogi Lal Pandya	Tribal-belt movement; Pandya = "Gandhi of Vagad"
Banswara	Banswara Praja Mandal	1943	Bhupendra Nath Trivedi circle	Vagad tribal mobilisation
Jaisalmer	Jaisalmer Praja Mandal	1945	Mithalal Vyas	Latest of the major states; desert state
Karauli	Karauli Praja Mandal	1939	Trilok Chand Mathur circle	1939 wave
Sirohi	Sirohi Praja Mandal	1939	Gokulbhai Bhatt	Bhatt = "Gandhi of Rajasthan" in popular usage

- Jaipur 1931 is the fixed first: its founder was Kapoorchand Patni; the Mandal was reorganised in 1936-37 and Jamnalal Bajaj became its towering president figure, courting arrest in the 1939 satyagraha; Hiralal Shastri led the constructive wing and became Rajasthan's first Chief Minister after integration.
- In Mewar, the 1938 Praja Mandal under Manikya Lal Verma was banned the day it was born; Verma ran the movement from Ajmer exile and the 1941-42 agreements slowly legalised it.
- Jodhpur's politics ran through the Marwar Lok Parishad (1938) of Jai Narayan Vyas, plus the older Hitkarini Sabha tradition — note that Jodhpur's body kept the name Lok Parishad, not Praja Mandal, a favourite RAS detail.
- Kota's Praja Mandal (1939) is tied to Pandit Nayanuram Sharma, the Hadoti leader whose 1941 murder shocked the movement.
- Shahpura, the tiny state, outran them all: in 1947 its ruler accepted a constitution-making process and Shahpura got the first fully responsible government in Rajasthan, before integration.
- During Quit India (1942), Jaipur saw the "Azad Morcha" split (1942) when a section under Baba Harishchandra wanted direct action against the state's war support — an advanced detail RAS has asked.
- Women's participation grew steadily: Anjana Devi Chaudhary (Ramnarayan Chaudhary's wife) was the first prominent woman satyagrahi of Rajasthan; Narendra Kumari and others led in Mewar; by the 1940s women picketed liquor and foreign-cloth shops across the states.

EXAM TRAP: First Praja Mandal = Jaipur (1931), founder Kapoorchand Patni. It is NOT Mewar, and its founder is NOT Jamnalal Bajaj (he led it later). Bundi (1931) is the other early one examiners use as a distractor.

MEMORY HOOK: Shahpura = smallest state, biggest first — first full responsible government, 1947. Jaipur = first Praja Mandal, 1931. Two "firsts", two small facts, endless questions.

PYQ PATTERN: Jodhpur's body = Marwar Lok Parishad (not Praja Mandal). Mewar's leader = Manikya Lal Verma. Dungarpur's Bhogi Lal Pandya = "Gandhi of Vagad"; Gokulbhai Bhatt of Sirohi = "Gandhi of Rajasthan". Epithet pairs recur every cycle.

Chapter 10: Integration of Rajasthan — All Seven Phases

The Problem in 1947

- At independence, the land we now call Rajasthan held 19 princely states, 3 thikanas (chiefships — Kushalgarh, Neemrana, Lava) and the British province of Ajmer-Merwara.
- The rulers were free, on paper, to stay independent. That they did not is the work of three forces: the people's Praja Mandal movements, the rulers' own realism, and above all Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel, India's Home and States Minister, with his secretary V. P. Menon, who negotiated the mergers.
- The integration was done in seven phases between March 1948 and November 1956. RAS asks this as a master match-the-pair: phase, date, name, members, capital, head of government, Rajpramukh.

The Seven Phases: Master Table

Phase	Union name	Date	Member states	Capital	Prime Minister / Chief Minister	Rajpramukh
1	Matsya Union (Matsya Sangh)	18 March 1948	Alwar, Bharatpur, Dholpur, Karauli	Alwar	Shobharam Kumawat	Maharaja Udai Bhan Singh (Dholpur)
2	Rajasthan Union (Rajasthan Sangh)	25 March 1948	Kota, Bundi, Jhalawar, Dungarpur, Banswara, Pratapgarh, Shahpura, Kishangarh, Tonk	Kota	Gokul Lal Asawa	Maharao Bhim Singh II (Kota)
3	United State of Rajasthan	18 April 1948	Rajasthan Union + Udaipur (Mewar)	Udaipur	Manikya Lal Verma	Maharana Bhupal Singh (Mewar)
4	Greater Rajasthan (Vrihat Rajasthan)	30 March 1949	United State + Jaipur, Jodhpur, Bikaner, Jaisalmer	Jaipur	Hiralal Shastri	Maharaja Sawai Man Singh II (Jaipur); Maharaj Pramukh: Bhupal Singh of Mewar

Phase	Union name	Date	Member states	Capital	Prime Minister / Chief Minister	Rajpramukh
5	United State of Greater Rajasthan	15 May 1949	Greater Rajasthan + Matsya Union merged into it	Jaipur	Hiralal Shastri	Sawai Man Singh II
6	(Formation of Rajasthan state)	26 January 1950	The union recognised as Rajasthan, a Part B state of the Indian Union	Jaipur	Hiralal Shastri (first Chief Minister of Rajasthan)	Sawai Man Singh II (Rajpramukh till 1956)
7	Present Rajasthan	1 November 1956	+ Ajmer-Merwara and Abu-Delwara (from Bombay); Sunel (from Madhya Pradesh); Sironj given to Madhya Pradesh	Jaipur	Mohan Lal Sukhadia	Post of Rajpramukh abolished; Gurumukh Nihal Singh became first Governor

Reading the Story Behind the Table

- Phase 1 — Matsya Union (18 March 1948): the four eastern states — Alwar, Bharatpur, Dholpur, Karauli — combined first. The name "Matsya" recalls the ancient janapada of the same soil. Inaugurated by Union minister N. V. Gadgil. Dholpur's Maharaja became Rajpramukh and Shobharam Kumawat the first Prime Minister.
- Phase 2 — Rajasthan Union (25 March 1948): nine southern and south-eastern states — Kota, Bundi, Jhalawar, Dungarpur, Banswara, Pratapgarh, Shahpura, Kishangarh and Tonk — formed the Rajasthan Sangh with capital at Kota, Maharao Bhim Singh II as Rajpramukh and Gokul Lal Asawa as Prime Minister.
- Phase 3 — United State of Rajasthan (18 April 1948): Mewar joined, bringing its prestige. Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru inaugurated the union at Udaipur. Maharana Bhupal Singh became Rajpramukh and Manikya Lal Verma Prime Minister.
- Phase 4 — Greater Rajasthan (30 March 1949): the four big states — Jaipur, Jodhpur, Bikaner, Jaisalmer — came in. Sardar Patel inaugurated Greater Rajasthan at Jaipur on 30 March 1949 — the date still celebrated as Rajasthan Day. Sawai Man Singh II of Jaipur became Rajpramukh, while Bhupal Singh of Mewar was honoured with the unique title Maharaj Pramukh. Hiralal Shastri became Prime Minister (the title soon became Chief Minister).
- Phase 5 — United State of Greater Rajasthan (15 May 1949): the Matsya Union was dissolved into Greater Rajasthan after the Shankarrao Deo Committee recommended merger over separate existence (a committee under Dr. Shankar Rao Deo examined Matsya's future as its politics grew unstable).
- Phase 6 — 26 January 1950: with the Constitution, the union became Rajasthan, a Part B state, with the same government continuing.
- Phase 7 — 1 November 1956: under the States Reorganisation Act (following the Fazal Ali Commission — the States Reorganisation Commission), Rajasthan reached its present shape:

Ajmer-Merwara merged, Abu Road and Delwara tehsils came from Bombay state, Sunel came from Madhya Pradesh, and Sironj went to Madhya Pradesh. The office of Rajpramukh ended; Gurumukh Nihal Singh became the first Governor, and Mohan Lal Sukhadia was Chief Minister.

The Sirohi Split Note

- Sirohi is the integration story's famous loose end. In January 1950 Sirohi was merged into Bombay state (except Abu-Delwara arrangements disputed between Gujarat and Rajasthan claims), which provoked strong protest in Rajasthan.
- The States Reorganisation Commission (Fazal Ali Commission) finally settled it: Abu-Delwara came to Rajasthan on 1 November 1956, while the rest of Sirohi had already been restored to Rajasthan in 1950 after the agitation — the safe summary for RAS: Sirohi's full merger into Rajasthan was completed through the 1956 reorganisation, with Abu-Delwara as the last piece.

EXAM TRAP: Phase 1 capital = Alwar, PM = Shobharam Kumawat. Phase 4 (Greater Rajasthan) date = 30 March 1949 (Rajasthan Day). Jaipur became capital only from Phase 4. The first Chief Minister of integrated Rajasthan was Hiralal Shastri, and the first Governor (1956) was Gurumukh Nihal Singh — Rajpramukh (Sawai Man Singh II) and Governor are different offices; do not interchange them.

MEMORY HOOK: Learn the phases by their joining stars: Phase 1 = 4 eastern (Matsya). Phase 2 = 9 small southern. Phase 3 = Mewar joins. Phase 4 = the Big Four. Phase 5 = Matsya merges in. 1950 = name "Rajasthan". 1956 = present map. Dates: 18-3-48, 25-3-48, 18-4-48, 30-3-49, 15-5-49, 26-1-50, 1-11-56.

PYQ PATTERN: "Who inaugurated Greater Rajasthan?" — Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel. "Who was the Maharaj Pramukh?" — Bhupal Singh of Mewar. "Shankarrao Deo Committee relates to?" — the Matsya Union's merger. These three recur constantly.
